Revision of the Laws.

One of the most formidable tasks confronting Congress is the consideration and adoption of the report of the commission to revise and codify the laws of the United States. This commission has completed the work intrusted to it in 1897, and its report, in two large octavo volumes, com prising the effective statutes of the Federal government up to date, was sent to Congress on December 15 last.

The need of such a revision of Federal legislation has been for a long time urgent, and now that it is completed it should be put into effect without undue delay. Yet haste in the re-enactment of a body of legislation covering the entire field of Federal jurisdiction would not be cal and mental labor connected with the scrutiny of over 1,800 pages of law may deter our legislators from an early completion of the job cut out for them by the revisers. The commission has done more than to compile the statutes. It has incorporated into its report much new legiswhich has been enlarged so as to compreeffect of new enactments.
